Brother Lepre delves into Indian intermarriages

Brother Jerome Lepre, a member of the faculty at Brother Martin High School in New Orleans who is descended from several old Coast families, explores the traditional stories of Indian intermarriage among many of the early settlers on the Coast in the November issue of "The Journal of Mississippi History."

Brother Jerome discusses these stories handed down from father to son, and provides facts uncovered in his research to back his theories about these Indian ancestors.

He primarily discusses the Indian women "Emashapa" or Frances Emily Baudrau, who is associated with the Lafontaine and Ladner clans, and Noatima, or Marguerite Laforce, who is connected with the Moran family.

Lepre has done extensive research to determine whether Noatima, or Marguerite Laforce, was the wife of Joseph Morin, son of Joseph Morin of Canada and Louise Ladner, daughter of Nicholas Ladner and Marianne Paquet, a statement made in family tradition.

He has turned up no evidence to support this fact and instead has found documents of marriage between Joseph Morin II and Marianne Paquinette of New Orleans and baptismal records of several children.

The time element of the marriage and the birth of the children also cast doubt whether the legendary Noatima was a first wife of Joseph Morin, according to Brother Jerome's research.

He has uncovered in the 1850 census, however, a Leonard Laforce living with Mrs. Joseph Moran, as the only clue to a connection between the Laforce family and the Morans (Morins).

The census, however, shows no relationship for these families and no other document found links the Noatima or Marguerite Laforce with this family, he says.

In the case of Emashapa, however, he puts forth numerous citations of this woman under various names which give some substance to the stories of her link to several Coast families.

Brother Jerome also gives data on Magdaleine, the natural daughter by an Indian woman of Joseph Baptist Baudrau dit Graveline, who eventually settled in Jackson County.

Magdaleine married Pierre Paquet and they were the parents of Marianne, who married Nicholas Ladner.

This very excellent article may be read in the journal, which is probably found in many Coast libraries, or can be purchased at the single issue price of $2 by writing The Mississippi Historical Society, Box 571, Jackson, Miss. 39205. The annual membership fee in the organization, which includes a subscription to the quarterly is $8.50.
